

XXXIX.—REPORT ON THE DISTRIBUTION OF CARP TO JULY 1, 1881, FROM YOUNG REARED IN 1879 AND 1880.

BY CHAS. W. SMILEY.

The carp which were imported from Germany by the United States Fish Commission were placed by Mr. Rud. Hessel, who had accompanied the shipment from Europe, in the Druid Hill Park ponds, at Baltimore, on the 26th of May, 1876. These consisted of 227 leather and mirror carp and 118 scale carp.* In the spring of 1878 there were transferred to Washington 65 leather carp and 48 scale carp. These were placed in the ponds which had meantime been prepared for them. The carp which remained in Baltimore under the charge of Mr. T. B. Ferguson spawned in 1878 but hybridized with gold-fish, and the young being worthless were destroyed. The carp in the Washington ponds first spawned in 1879, and over 6,000 young were reared for distribution.† A similar number was reared at the Druid Hill ponds and these were distributed largely to citizens of Maryland, who were informed that they could apply in person at the park for the fish. The total number of carp sent out in 1879 was 12,265, to over 300 persons in 25 States and Territories. Among the recipients were various State commissioners who redistributed their fish.

In 1880 the yield of young fish was very much larger, aggregating 66,165 carp for distribution.

In anticipation of a supply of young carp, applications began to be filed with the Commissioner as early as the fall of 1876. The records show the earliest applications to have been as follows:

- September, 1876, from B. B. Redding, San Francisco, Cal.
- October, 1876, from Hon. Simon Cameron, Harrisburg, Pa.

Table showing the number of carp applications filed with the United States Fish Commission monthly during three years ending December 31, 1879. ‡

‡ Several of these applications were from State commissions for carp to redistribute, and thus a much larger number of ultimate receipts is indicated.

After January 1, 1880, the number of applicants rapidly increased, so that the number of applications filed that year was nearly 2,000.

Number of applications supplied in 1879, 1880, and the spring of 1881, from the crops of 1879 and 1880, as shown in detail in the list at the close of this report.

With the production of several thousand young carp for distribution in the fall of 1879, to applicants distributed through most of the United States, the Commission was confronted with a new problem regarding the best method of placing them in the hands of applicants. Mr. T. B. Ferguson was placed in charge of this work. Substantially the same method was adopted which had been in use in the distribution of shad. This consisted in the use of a large wooden-bound tin can nearly filled with water. The cans were of two sizes, 5 and 10 gallons. The tin cans, when filled with water, were considered suitable for transporting 50 to 100 carp. Lots of from 100 to 500 were placed in the requisite number of cans and sent to State commissioners, Congressmen, and others who had agreed to receive them at central points and distribute them. Messengers of the Commission usually accompanied the shipments, and were instructed to change the water at convenient intervals. Nearly one-half the carp of 1879 was transferred in bulk to those persons in various States. Lists of persons to be supplied therefrom were forwarded with the fish, and the applicants notified by mail to apply in person or by representative to those who had undertaken this work. Many applicants in Maryland and places within easy reach of Baltimore and Washington were notified to come for their fish. Of course there was considerable expense attending the use of so large cans, weighing 60 pounds or more, and the sending of messengers to accompany each shipment. These expenses were borne in part by the United States Commission and partly by the State commissions.

In many cases, where a single applicant was to be supplied with but 15 or 20 fish, it was impossible for the carp to be accompanied by an attendant. Then packages were forwarded by express, suitable notice of the arrangements having been given in advance. In these cases the same 5 and 10 gallon cans were used and the recipient permitted his choice of paying the cost price of $2 for the can, or of returning it by express. Usually there was no opportunity for the change of water in the cans while in express transit. However, there were not many losses for the lack of it. But the express charges often came to several dollars.

Substantially the same methods continued in use throughout the distribution of 1879-'80 and the spring of 1881. But the system was destined to be revolutionized by dispensing, very largely, with attendants, and by reducing the vessels from 10 gallons to 4 quarts capacity. But the experiments which led to these improvements were not undertaken until November, 1881. These have been described elsewhere, and the more recent methods reported upon by Col. M. McDonald.*

The records of the earliest carp distribution are not so complete and accurate as might be desired, and the writer had no personal connection with it. He has gathered up from many sources whatever he could bearing upon the subject, and it is presented here in order that a serious gap may not be left uncovered. The work in its incipiency did not give promise to reach the gigantic dimensions of to-day. There was no surety that carp would be acceptable as food-fish, and it was not intended to replace other and better fish, of which there are several kinds. The Commission had no office nor clerical force except two or three men employed in Professor Baird's private residence, and it has been his aim from the start to spend as little money as possible on office machinery and to get the greatest attainable results in fish culture. Hence the difficulty at this date, four years removed from the period in question, of reporting fully thereon. The following table is intended as a consolidation of all attainable data regarding the distribution of carp reared in 1879 and 1880. Reports of the results attained will appear next year.

Table showing by States the final destination, so far as obtainable, of the carp distributed by the United States Fish Commission from the crops of 1879 and 1880.
